

ROLAND TOPOR

Profile:

- Writer, playwright, painter and "provocative" draughtsman famous for his characters and landscapes.
- An impassioned artist with biting black humour.
- His works cast an impertinent glance on society and its institutions. They incite the spectator to reflect on rather disturbing topics.

Biography (1938 – 1997)

Roland Topor was born in 1938 in Paris, the son of Polish emigrants. Author and draughtsman, Roland Topor studied at the Beaux-Arts school and first published his drawings and stories in the reviews Bizarre, Arts, Le Rire and Fiction. In 1962, he co-founded the movement "Panique" with Arrabal, Jodorowsky and Stenberg. This resulted in several album books including "Le Locataire Chimérique" (1964), "Les Mémoires d'un vieux Con" (1975) and "Café Panique" (1981). As an engraver (a large number of his lithographs and wood engravings were published by the Atelier Clot in Paris) and painter, he created images for the magic lantern in Fellini's film "Casanova" in 1975, and illustrated literary works, including the complete works of Marcel Aymé in 1977. He designed the decor and costumes for Ligeti's opera "Le Grand Macabre" in 1978, Poulenc and Appolinaire's "Les Mamelles de Tiresias" in 1985, Mozart's "The Magic Flute" in 1990 and Jarry's "King Ubu" in 1991. He won the national Grand Prix for graphic arts in 1981 and the Grand Prix des Arts de la Ville de Paris. A large-scale retrospective exhibition, Topor: death and the devil was dedicated to him at the Stadtmuseum in Munich in 1985. In 1994, a film by Gerhard Thiel, Les Rêves de Topor, was broadcast on the channel ARTE during one of its "Théma" evenings. He died in 1997.

Quotation: "Humanity needs the sublime. The sublime of the sublime is art. The sublime of art is the avant-garde."

Roland Topor - Extract from his Mémoires d'un vieux con

Roland Topor for Daum

"Les Mains Sales" (Dirty hands), 250 copies

Through this sculpture in "pâte de cristal", Roland Topor aimed to express his demand for truth: "the hands one uses to hide oneself from the gaze of other people burn like red-hot iron."

Height: 48.5 cm

The world of Roland Topor

"Nord-Sud" (North/South) 1990

"La Couvée" (The Clutch) 1977

"Jose Artur"

Photomorphose: "Con de fée"

